HISTORICAL NOTE

The Nebraska Military Department has its origins in an 1854 act of the territorial legislature which provided for a volunteer militia. Until 1881, two types of volunteer units served: the militia, which were home defense units which fought within the borders of Nebraska; and volunteer units, which often fought as regular army units outside the borders of the state, as in the Civil War.

The office of Adjutant General for Nebraska was created on February 15, 1864. In 1871, this office was abolished and its functions were transferred to the Secretary of State. The present National Guard was created by the Nebraska Military Code of 1881 and the office of Adjutant General was re-established. When the Guard was mobilized for federal service in World War I, the state legislature authorized the formation of home guard units until the war ended.

The legislature renamed the office of Adjutant General to the Nebraska Military Department in 1974. The Military Department functions as a state department of defense for both military and non-military operations. Its main mission is to provide units for the reserve component of the U.S. armed forces to be mobilized in case of national emergency or war.

Further information about the military history of Nebraska and specific military units which served may be found by consulting secondary sources available in the historical society library.

SCOPE AND CONTENT

This record group consists of the records of the Nebraska Military Department, 1855 to the present. These records include militia and volunteer units, home guard units, and the Nebraska National Guard. The records are arranged in three subgroups: 1) Records relating to militia and volunteer units, 1855-1880; 2) Records of the Nebraska National Guard, 1881-197_; and 3) Records of home guard units, 1918-1975.
